Conference Venue

San Servolo is currently the only island in the lagoon that has been recovered by a local Authority, the Venice Provincial Authority. Its transformation into a place for training and dialogue between culture and experience, memory and history, constitutes an initiative that differs from the others that exist in the lagoon and that are connected to business and the tourism monoculture of the city".

Lodgings in San Servolo

San Servolo offers reception services that are exclusively connected to conference activities or for research or study projects conducted on the Island, so hotel accommodations are excluded from the reception services.

The greetings and reception service is guaranteed continuously for every day of the year, 24 hours per day. A guarded safe and holding box for valuables is also provided.

All of the rooms have been recently restored and furnished and are modern and spacious; cleaning services has to be booked and paid as extra costs.

Rooms are equipped with: air conditioning, internet access and cable connection telephone, satellite connection television

Every building offers the following services: TV room with satellite connection, elevators, public rest-rooms. There are also provided services for washing drying and pressing.

Room cleanings are provided normally once a week. The cost for daily cleanings is € 8,00/per day (VAT included) and must be requested when you check in.

Laundry facilities

Washing and drying facilities are located in Building 12. Each load costs €3. There is a vending machine for washing powder etc.

Campus Cafeteria

The Cafeteria is open every day with following timetable:

Breakfast	7.30 am - 9.30 am
Lunch	12.30 pm –2.30 pm
Dinner	7.00 pm – 9.00 pm

A bar also opened recently on campus and is located on the ground floor of Area 6 in the VIU main buildings.

Computer Rooms

The PC rooms are located on the first floor of Zone 7 and are open to all VIU students and professors, 24 hours a day. Ask your program coordinator for an access card (a €5 deposit is required).All PCs are connected to the Internet, and students can access online Venetian library catalogues, Duke-on-line and other online information resources.

How to reach / leave S. Servolo

By plane: International Airport “Marco Polo”
www.veniceairport.com

When you arrive in Venice International Airport you have to reach the mainland dock from where you will have two possibilities to reach San Servolo or the historic centre of Venice:

1. By regular motorboat service

Operated by ALILAGUNA, which runs every hour with two different lines to the Lido of Venice Santa Maria Elisabetta dock or to Venice historical centre, Saint Mark's area (right stop to San Servolo)

This service runs from 6.00 to 00.00.

Tickets has to be purchased before entering into the boat at shops.

In order to get to more info about this service, please contact: www.alilaguna.it

2 By private water taxi

The journey lasts about 40 minutes and costs approx. 80 Euro.

By train: Railway station “Santa Lucia”

By public boat service

Line 82 from Piazzale Roma to St. Mark's Square

Line 82 from Tronchetto to St. Mark's Square

Line 20(*) from St. Mark's square (S.Zaccaria Stop) to San Servolo.

(*)Time schedule at: <http://www.sanservolo.provincia.venezia.it/english/arrivare/default.asp>

By private water taxi

The journey to San Servolo or to the area of St. Mark's square lasts about 25 minutes and costs approx. 60 Euro.

By car: Motorway A/4 “Milan-Venice”, Exit “Venezia-Mestre”,

If your hotel is located in the Venice historical centre

Cars can be parked at “Tronchetto” or in the Piazzale Roma car parks (the cost varies from 18 to 20 Euros a day).

From there, San Servolo can be reached using public transportation:

Line 82 from Piazzale Roma to St. Mark's Square

Line 82 from Tronchetto to St. Mark's Square

Line 20(*) from St. Mark's square (S.Zaccaria Stop) to San Servolo.

(*)Time schedule at: <http://www.sanservolo.provincia.venezia.it/english/arrivare/default.asp>

If your hotel is located on the Lido of Venice

the public car ferry service (Line ACTV 17) is operating daily every 50 minutes.

Parking in the Lido of Venice is generally free on the streets, safe but limited.

Cars can circulate freely on the island.

Moving Around

ACTV is the Public transportation Company who regularly connect all the islands of San Servolo, the historic center, Murano, Burano, Torcello but not the International Airport of Venice.

Actv provides transport services on both land and water. The company has fleets of water- and land buses for services in the centre, suburbs and out of town.

Eating Out

Restaurants do usually post menus and price lists. Do not forget, though that the cost of the meal will be marked up with a cover charge (pane e coperto) and a service charge (servizio, 12-15% as a rule, it is always best to reserve a table at least a couple of hours before you want to eat. Tipping the waiters is appreciated, but not obligatory. Do not get disheartened those of you who have limited funds available for eating out, but who nevertheless would like to try some Venetian specialities. Just opt for a decent BACARO or an OSTERIA.

The Venetians have always had a place to go, anytime of the day, to drink ombra (literally “a shadow” – in fact, a glass of white wine).

If you want a vague idea of what a bacaro is like, think of a pub with no large saloon bar or private room. With your ombra you can eat some cicheti – hard boiled eggs with or without mayonnaise, salty anchovies, meat-balls, seppioline (squid), sardines in breadcrumbs or in saor (pickled with spices), tuna fish and onions to name a few.

Venice is full of bacari (as you will discover for yourselves) and you are always likely to find at least a few customers in every one. Apart from the exceptions, bacari are open until 1pm and then from 5pm to 8pm.

A very fine dividing line separates a bacaro from an osteria; in the latter a selection of hot dishes is usually on offer, and you can eat not only at the bar, but also sit at a table, if you prefer. In general, osterie have longer opening hours than bacari.

It is worth bearing in mind that restaurants in Venice close early in the evening, especially in winter, so you might experience some difficulty in finding something to eat after 9pm from October to March.

Once you have found a place to eat, here are some of the typical dishes that you are most likely to come across.

“PRIMO” or FIRST COURSE

Bigoi (or bigoli) in salsa: a sort of spaghetti served with a sauce.

Risotto di mare: a rice dish with mixed seafood.

Risotto di cape: a rice dish with clams and shellfish

Risotto di trevigiana: a rice dish prepared using only rice, butter, onions, salt and strange red chicory (radicchio) from Treviso – hence the name.

“SECONDO” or SECOND COURSE

Venice’s speciality is seafood. Although some restaurants may serve frozen fish, Venetian seafood dishes should be prepared using fresh fish so, as fisherman do not work on Sunday, restaurants are usually closed on Mondays.

CA' FOSCARI
VENEZIA

DIPARTIMENTO DI INFORMATICA

Scampi, anguilla (eel), gamberetti (shrimps), seppie (squid) and sogliole (sole) are served alone or in Venetian versions of risotto.

Baccalà (salted cod) can be a very sophisticated, albeit cheap, second course.

Orata (dory) and branzino (bass) are considered to be the best fish for grilling.

Fish is not only available as a second course; it is often eaten as an antipasto (hors d'oeuvre) and is an essential ingredient of the Venetian zuppa di pesce (fish soup).

Fegato alla veneziana means “liver Venetian style”. Veal liver and onion are sliced and cooked in olive oil.

Polenta, described by British handbooks as a porridge of cornmeal, is served as a side dish, either freshly prepared and served mainly with game birds, or girdled and served with nearly everything but typically with seppie in nero (squid in ink).

WINES

Veneto, the region surrounding Venice, is known as one of the best wine-producing areas in Italy. White Tocai di Lison and red Cabernet and Merlot di Pramaggiore should be regarded as good choices. Other reputed Tocais, Cabernets and Merlots, together with white Sauvignon and Refosco, come from the nearby region of Friuli.

In winter, you will also find many lesser known, sweetish wines in the bacari, such as Recioto, Ramandolo or Zibibbo.

A sparkling wine called Prosecco is also produced in Veneto; it is very enjoyable, although not really a champagne. If you want to try a high-quality champagne, ask for Ferrari Brut (nothing to do with the sports cars.)

The classic liqueur in the Veneto region is grappa, a colourless, flavourless liquid, made from distilling wine press pomace.

ex Ridotto Theatre, Hotel MONACO et GRAN CANAL.
San Marco 1332 - 30124 Venezia www.hotelmonaco.it

The Hotel, which overlooks the Grand Canal, is in one of Venice's most charming areas. The Hotel Monaco has majestic views of the Church of Santa Maria della Salute and the island of San Giorgio and it is just next to Cà Giustinian the historical site of the Biennale. From 1638 the building, originally belonging to the Dandolo family, hosted the first "Ridotto Pubblico", a place where nobility and people from all walks of life, (adventurers, courtesans, swindlers, and travellers) retired for pleasure and intrigue. Giacomo Casanova considered this place the ideal backdrop for his love conquests. The recent restoration has managed to revive, with a contemporary feel, the atmosphere of this historic building.

The term "Ridotto" ("Refuge") has been familiar to Venetians in every sense of the word since 1282. It once referred to a place where any "type" of person, from aristocrats to adventurers and travellers could "seek refuge" or retire, for various reasons, as gambling, the attentions of the courtesans, social and political relations.

In particular, tradition would have it that gambling started as an outdoor pursuit and, between the columns of Marco and Todaro in St. Mark's Square, it had gained such ground that the Government of the City of Venice heartily welcomed the "retirement" of gamblers behind closed doors.

Gambling continued in the building until its definitive closure on 27 November 1774, on the insistence of moralists who claimed that, "the seductive house of Refuge was seducing the entire city... and not only Venice, and its unpropitious influence had seen fortunes squandered, families ruined and political intrigue, which was a severe threat to Serenissima Republic, often facilitated by the compulsory use of masks. From that date onwards, during the XIX and XX centuries, Palazzo Dandolo was assigned to host various activities. In particular, it became a Dance Hall and Theatre and has remained so to the present day.

The Islands of the Lagoon: Murano, Burano and Torcello

A motorboat ride to the most famous islands of the lagoon. On the way you will see the island of Burano, where each house is painted with a different colour and famous for its lace making. Tour will then continue to Torcello, the first island inhabited by Venetian people fleeing from the Barbarian invasion, where you will visit the 11th Century ancient Cathedral. The visit of the island of Murano, famous for its unique art of glass-blowing, will complete the tour before returning to S. Servolo. Tour lasts approximately 5 hours.
